Food Packaging Regulations— Top Tips

Comply with the Regulations Make sure the information on your printed packaging complies with the Food Information Regulations. All food businesses in Ireland are obliged by law to provide adequate information to the consumer. A set of regulations exist – these are known as the Food Information Regulations and are governed by EU legislation. (Regulation (EU) No 1169/2011) The Food Safety Authority of Ireland (FSAI) is the body in Ireland which governs the implementation of these regulations.

FSAI Information is provided by the FSAI on their website www.fsai.ie, on an advice line: 1890 33 66 77 and info@fsai.ie

Topics Topics covered by the regulations include Mandatory Food Information, Allergens, Date of Minimum Durability, Nutrition Declaration, Country of Origin and many other topics.

At Dollard Packaging, we know you've got a lot to do running your business and you'll want to get the best quality packaging to showcase your product.

We've been producing printed packaging for over 32 years—that's a lot of boxes and a lot of experience! We want you to share our experience in our downloadable guides to help you get the very best packaging for your needs.

Food Packaging Regulations—Tips

Packaging Design Certain food information on your packaging must be in a minimum font size and in the case of some information (such as allergens), it must be highlighted in a particular way. Be sure to communicate this information carefully to the designer of your packaging artwork.

Proof-reading: Take extra care when proof reading your packaging proof – mistakes and omissions could mean that your packaging does not meet the regulations. (check out the Dollard Packaging website www.dollard-packaging.ie for our Guide on Proof-reading: Packaging Proofing Checklist)
